Building on the work of Kohn and Nohria (1992) and others, we argue that the most effective way to implement change is through a combination of top-down and bottom-up approaches. This involves a mix of formal and informal communication channels, as well as a focus on both the organization's structure and its culture. The goal is to create a sense of ownership and commitment among all employees, while also ensuring that the organization's strategic goals are clearly communicated and understood.
